U.

U [ool] is the twenty-fourth letter in the Castilian alphabet and fifth of the vowels; it loses its sound after q and g, and becomes a liquid, except where it is followed by an a, as in guarismo, or when marked with a diæresis, as in agüero, when it retains its proper sound. The letters b, v, and n were formerly used as equivalent to each other in writing or printing. Example: Las cosas de Perpiñán estauan en mucha quiebra, por auer quitado vn governador, que trataba bien la ciudad. (Comentarios de Herrera, Madrid, 1624.) This observation will prevent many mistakes in reading. Each of these letters is at present restricted to its own proper sound, and particular care should be taken not to confound them, as they differ both in sound and in import; as, él desuela, he unpaves; él desvela, he keeps others awake. U in chemical formulas stands for uranium. U ralona, Double u, w.

W.

This letter does not belong to the Spanish alphabet and is only used in terms, chiefly proper names, taken from languages of northern Europe. It is named V doble (double v). In chemistry W stands for Wolfram (tungsten).

X.

X [ay'-kís], f. The twenty-sixth letter of the alphabet. This letter is pronounced like cs or gs in English; the Castilians give it constantly only the sound of cs; in the other Spanish provinces both sounds are indifferently used. When it is the last letter of a word it has a guttural sound, like that of the Spanish j (the German ch in Ich), as in carcaz (quiver); but such words are no longer written with x, but with j; thus reloj (watch), formerly relox. As this sound is rather difficult to utter, words ending with j are pronounced either by dropping that letter, or sounding it like cs; thus, reló or re-locs. To give this letter its true guttural sound is considered by many as an affectation.—X had formerly two distinct sounds; one like cs, which was indicated by a circumflex accent over the vowel that followed the x, and the other guttural, like an English h very strongly aspirated, in which case the vowel was unaccented; thus, próximo (adj. proximate, next), and próximo (n. a fellow-being): the first was pronounced proc'-se-mo, and the second pro'-he-mo. At present, all those words in which the x has a guttural sound are written with j, which the scholar is requested to consult. It is becoming a very censurable fashion, particularly in America, for want of proper instruction, to pronounce and write s instead of x in a great number of words beginning with ex; thus, esámen, esperiencia, etc.: but this use is not supported by the old Castilians and educated persons. X (and j) often represent the Arabic letter shín. Thus carcaz (now careaj); xábeca (net, now jábeca); Xerez (now Jerez, whence "sherry").

Xa, Xe, Xi, Xo, Xu. Words formerly beginning with either of these syllables, will be found in JA, JE, JI, Jo, Ju.

Xo [cso], int. Whoa! V. Jo and Cho.

Y.

Y [yay, ee gre-ay'-gah], f. The twenty-seventh letter of the Castilian alphabet, stands as a vowel and a consonant. Y, when alone, or after a vowel, or followed by a consonant, or at the end of a word, is a vowel, and sounds as e or ee in English: Hoy y mañana (To-day and to-morrow), o'-e ee mah-nyah'-nah.—Y, before a vowel in the same syllable, or between two vowels in the same word, is a consonant, and sounds like the English y in the words yard, yell, you. Of late attempts have been wrongly made to revive the old fashion of writing i instead of y at the end of words, and when it is a conjunction; thus, estoi, doi, i, etc., in place of estoy, doy, y. Words formerly written with y before a consonant, as regna, peyne, have changed it into i; thus, reina, peine.

Y [ee], conj. And. It is frequently used in interrogatives, or by way of a reply; as ¿Y tú, no haces lo mismo? And you, do you not do the same? ¿Y tú, donde has estado? And thou, where hast thou been? ¿Y bien? And well then? ¿Y qué tenemos con eso? And what is that to us? or, And what of all that? Generally it is a copulative conjunction; as, Alfonso, Fernando y Manuel, Alphonsus, Ferdinand, and Emmanuel. When the conjunction y is followed by a word beginning with i or hi, the conjunction e is used in its stead; as, Sabiduría e ignorancia, Wisdom and ignorance. Padre e hijo, Father and son.

Y, adv. (Obs.) There. V. ALLÍ.

Ya [yah], adv. 1. Already. 2. Presently, immediately, now. 3. Finally, ultimately. 4. APPENDIX.

A VOCABULARY OF GEOGRAPHICAL TERMS

WHICH ARE NOT IDENTICAL IN THE ENGLISH AND SPANISH LANGUAGES.

NOTE.—Adjectives derived from proper names, geographical and other, are entered in the body of the dictionary and therefore not repeated here. Thus: Abisinio, a, Abyssinian; Cesariano, na, Cæsarian, belonging to Julius Cæsar.

N. B.—Words derived from the names of countries, towns, etc., may be taken as substantives or adjectives; as, American, Americano, which means a native of America, or things relating to America. Therefore, and in order to avoid useless repetition, only the English word corresponding to the Spanish, or the periphrasis native of, is annexed to it. The scholar may easily find out whether the noun is taken substantively or adjectively. He is also to keep in mind that this kind of nouns, if they terminate in o, change it into a for the feminine, and add a when they end in a consonant; as, Italiano, Italiana; Andaluz, Andaluza; Inglés, Inglesa, etc.
